DID YOU KNOW?

Overcooking in microwaves happens because timers keep running after food is hot. Sensor Cooking detects actual steam levels to automatically stop heating the second your meal reaches perfection—no guessing required.

HOW TO DEMONSTRATE

SENSOR COOKING TECHNOLOGY

Open the microwave door and point toward the interior wall, tell your customer that inside the microwave, there's a built-in sensor that actually measures the moisture and steam coming off your plate as it heats. The microwave calculates when the food is hot, automatically adjusting the power level and shutting off at the exact second it's done—so your dinner never comes out rubbery or dried out.
